BEHIND THE TICKER: DECODING COMPANY FUNDAMENTALS

VeriSign:
A Cash Machine Facing an AI Future

SUMMARY

- VeriSign (NASDAQ: VRSN) operates a highly profitable, monopoly-like business as the exclusive registry operator for .com and .net, generating stable recurring cash flows with minimal reinvestment needs and strong capital efficiency.
- Financial performance has remained strong despite operating in a mature industry, with revenue and profits growing steadily over the past decade, largely supported by margin expansion and periodic domain price increases.
- Underlying domain name volumes are showing structural pressure, reflecting changing internet behaviour, alternative digital platforms, and the growing role of AI and machine-to-machine interactions that may gradually reduce reliance on domain names.

VeriSign:

SUMMARY

- VeriSign (NASDAQ: VRSN) operates a highly profitable, monopoly-like business as the exclusive registry operator for .com and .net, generating stable recurring cash flows with minimal reinvestment needs and strong capital efficiency.
- Financial performance has remained strong despite operating in a mature industry, with revenue and profits growing steadily over the past decade, largely supported by margin expansion and periodic domain price increases.
- Underlying domain name volumes are showing structural pressure, reflecting changing internet behaviour, alternative digital platforms, and the growing role of AI and machine-to-machine interactions that may gradually reduce reliance on domain names.

BACKGROUND

VeriSign is the gatekeeper of .com and .net, quietly operating the infrastructure that keeps these domains functioning globally, securely, and around the clock. Every day, billions of internet queries rely on its systems, making the company an unseen but essential part of the internet's backbone.

The business was not always this focused. A decade ago, VeriSign operated as a broader internet services company. Alongside domain registry operations, it offered cybersecurity solutions such as DDoS protection, managed DNS services, and threat intelligence products.

Over time, management deliberately exited these non-core activities. Today, VeriSign has transformed into a pure infrastructure company, focused solely on serving as the exclusive registry operator for .com and .net - two of the most valuable digital assets on the internet.

VeriSign generates revenue by charging domain registrars a fixed fee for new registrations, renewals, and transfers. While its services are global, the business remains largely US-centric, with the United States accounting for roughly two-thirds of total revenue.

The company operates within a mature and slow-growing industry. Growth in both domain registrations and industry revenue is generally expected to remain in the low single digits.

In many respects, VeriSign functions like a regulated monopoly:

- It holds the exclusive contracts to operate .com and .net, granted by ICANN and overseen by the U.S. government.
- It is permitted to raise .com prices by up to 7% annually, though only during specified contractual periods.
- The US Department of Commerce retains ultimate oversight, placing limits on pricing power.

AI DISRUPTION

At first glance, VeriSign appears insulated from technological disruption. Its infrastructure is deeply embedded in how the internet operates. Yet AI may not need to attack this infrastructure directly to weaken the business. Instead, disruption could emerge by changing how users and systems interact with the internet itself.

The Domain Name System (DNS), and by extension, domain names, was designed for human navigation. Users type or tap addresses such as shareinvestor.com to reach a destination online. But as AI increasingly intermediates digital interaction, the need for users to remember - or even see - domain names may gradually diminish.

Several structural shifts could disrupt its business:

- AI-mediated discovery: As users rely more on assistants such as ChatGPT or Gemini, the traditional process of typing domains or clicking search results may disappear.
- Machine-to-machine interaction: AI agents acting autonomously on behalf of users or businesses interact through APIs rather than web browsers.
- AI-generated digital presence: Modern AI tools can create storefronts, booking systems, and customer engagement channels without requiring standalone websites, potentially slowing demand for new domain registrations.

This transition may not occur overnight. Domain names will remain a necessary infrastructure for years to come. However, the central role of domains as digital identity anchors may gradually weaken as AI reshapes how information is searched, discovered, and transacted online.

OPERATING PERFORMANCE

Against the above backdrop, VeriSign's historical operating performance appears reassuring at first glance.

Chart 1 presents the company’s topline growth, profitability, and returns over the past decade. From a business performance perspective, the trends are clearly positive. Revenue, earnings, and capital efficiency - as reflected by gross profitability, ROA, and CFROA - have all moved upward over time.

Viewed this way, VeriSign appears to be an ideal business: a cash-generating toll booth with minimal competition, extremely high renewal rates, and predictable recurring revenue.

However, there may be a longer-term disruptive force that is not yet reflected in the company’s valuation – the rise of artificial intelligence.

Over the past ten years, revenue grew at a compound annual rate of 4.4%, while profit after tax expanded at a faster 8.6% CAGR. This stronger profit growth was primarily driven by margin expansion, supported by improving gross margins and a gradual decline in Selling, General, and Administration (SGA) expenses as a percentage of revenue. The left side of Chart 2 illustrates this operating leverage.

Chart 2: Margins and Price vs Volume

Note to Op Model: The price (revenue per name) was obtained by dividing the revenue for each year by the number of domain names for the year.

However, a more revealing picture emerges when we examine the underlying volume driver of the business.

The right side of Chart 2 shows that the total number of registered domain names has declined since 2022. This is unlikely to represent a cyclical slowdown. Instead, it points toward a gradual structural shift in how individuals and businesses establish their online presence.

Several forces appear to be contributing to this trend:

- Changing internet behaviour, as users increasingly access services through apps, voice assistants, and search platforms rather than navigating directly via typed domain names.
- Alternative digital identities, including social media platforms, e-commerce marketplaces, and drag-and-drop website builders, which reduce the necessity of owning a standalone .com domain.

For now, VeriSign has largely offset declining volumes through periodic price increases, as shown in the right side of Chart 2. However, this strategy has clear limits. Price increases are contractually constrained, while political scrutiny and public perception impose additional practical boundaries. Pricing, therefore, provides only a temporary buffer and cannot indefinitely compensate for a sustained contraction in domain demand.

From an investor’s standpoint, signs of this tension may already be visible in its return metrics. Free cash flow yield has declined from an average of about 6.3% in 2015–2016 to roughly 4.0% in 2023-2024, as illustrated on the right side of Chart 1.

PEER COMPARISON

I compared VeriSign's performance with the following companies:

- Cloudflare (NET) is an internet infrastructure company that provides cloud-based security, performance, and reliability services at the network edge.
- GoDaddy (GDDY) is a domain registrar targeting small businesses and entrepreneurs with a broad suite of services, from domain registration to website building and e-commerce tools.
- Akamai (AKAM) is an enterprise-focused provider of content delivery, web security, and cloud computing solutions.
- Team Internet Group (TIGXF) is a behind-the-scenes player in domain infrastructure and online advertising, earning revenue from domain name services and monetizing internet traffic through targeted advertising.

To place VeriSign’s performance in context, Table 1 compares the company with its peers. VeriSign sits roughly at the median in terms of 2024 revenue but exhibits one of the slower growth profiles within the group.

Company	Revenue
	2024 USD m	2021 to 2024 CAGR %
Verisign (VRSN)	1,557	5.5%
Akamai (AKAM)	3,991	4.9%
Cloudflare (NET)	1,669	36.5%
GoDaddy (GDDY)	4,753	7.6%
Team Internet Group (TIG)	803	25.1%

Table 1: Peer revenue

While VeriSign’s business model remains structurally distinct, the activities of its peers nevertheless highlight potential alternative avenues for growth beyond its current narrow focus.

That said, there is little immediate incentive for VeriSign to pursue such diversification. Its existing business continues to outperform peers across key operating and financial metrics.

VeriSign delivers superior returns on assets, higher EBIT margins, stronger free cash flow margins, and better earnings per share performance.

In other words, the company's current strategy maximizes profitability and capital efficiency, even if it comes at the expense of growth. The strategic question, therefore, is not whether VeriSign needs to change today, but whether maintaining this highly optimized yet narrowly concentrated model leaves it more exposed to longer-term structural shifts discussed earlier.

VALUATION

As seen in Charts 1 and 2, VeriSign's performance in the post-2020 period differs meaningfully from that of the pre-2020 years.

The more recent period reflects a business that has become fully streamlined following earlier divestitures, operating under revised pricing arrangements and a narrower strategic focus. At the same time, it captures the emerging trend of declining domain name volumes discussed earlier.

Given this structural shift, I based my valuation on what can reasonably be described as a post-2020 steady-state operating picture. Under this framework, I made the following assumptions.

First, base revenue was anchored to 2024 revenue, growing at 4.4% in perpetuity, consistent with VeriSign's revenue CAGR over the past decade. Implicit in this assumption is that declining domain volumes would continue to be more than offset by permitted price increases.

Second, contribution margins were set at the average levels recorded between 2021 and 2024. I assumed no further margin expansion, reflecting a mature business that has likely already captured most operational efficiencies.

Third, I assumed a zero reinvestment. Historically, VeriSign has exhibited a negative reinvestment, defined as:

Reinvestment = CAPEX & acquisitions – Depreciation & amortization + increase in Net Working Capital.

The negative outcome arises because depreciation and amortization have consistently exceeded capital expenditures and acquisition spending. In practical terms, this indicates that the company has been able to grow without committing incremental operating profits to reinvestment - a favourable characteristic of an asset-light infrastructure business.

Based on these assumptions, the estimated intrinsic value is approximately USD230 per share, compared with a market price of USD277 per share (end Sep 2025).

Even under this “business-as-usual” scenario - one that assumes continued stability and no disruption - the valuation offers no margin of safety. This implies that intrinsic value would likely fall further if the earlier AI-driven disruption risks were incorporated into the analysis.

CONCLUSION

VeriSign operates critical internet infrastructure, enjoys monopoly-like economics, requires minimal reinvestment, and generates exceptionally strong cash flows.

Historically, these characteristics have justified investor confidence. Over the past decade, VeriSign has steadily improved profitability despite operating in a mature industry. Management’s decision to divest non-core activities and focus exclusively on the .com and .net registries has produced a streamlined and highly efficient business model.

Yet the very factors that make VeriSign attractive today may also define its long-term risk. The company’s performance increasingly relies on price increases rather than volume growth, even as domain name registrations show signs of structural pressure.

While contractual pricing power has so far masked declining volumes, this lever is both regulated and finite. At the same time, emerging technological shifts - particularly the growing role of AI intermediaries - could gradually weaken the economic importance of domain names themselves.

My valuation suggests that even under a conservative “business-as-usual” scenario, VeriSign offers little or no margin of safety at current prices.

Google to require verification for financial ads in Malaysia from April 14

Google has introduced the financial services verification (FSV), its new certification requirements for financial services advertisers targeting Malaysia, to further protect Malaysians against financial scams.

Google said the FSV adds a new layer of security to the existing financial products and services policy by ensuring only legitimate, licensed financial service providers can reach users in Malaysia and run ads on Google's platforms.

From April 14, 2026, select advertisers of financial products and services will be required to complete a verification process before they can run ads on Google's platforms. Applications for the verification can be made through its compliance partner, G2.

As part of the verification process, financial services advertisers will need to demonstrate that they are authorised by Malaysian authorities, such as Bank Negara Malaysia (BNM), the Securities Commission Malaysia (SC) and the Labuan Financial Services Authority (LFSA).

Citing data from the Ministry of Home Affairs Malaysia, Google noted that financial scams are on the rise in Malaysia, with losses from financial fraud reaching RM2.77 billion in 2025 alone.

Google Malaysia country managing director Ben King said, “Scammers are constantly evolving their tactics to evade detection. That’s why we are strengthening our defences to ensure only authorised financial providers can reach users on Google”.

Malaysian Communications and Multimedia Commission (MCMC) managing director Abdul Karim Fakir Ali said the initiative by Google is a critical step in preventing financial scams from reaching Malaysians.

Trading opportunities emerge in commodity-linked stocks as geopolitical risks mount – Maybank IB

According to Maybank Investment Bank (Maybank IB), trading opportunities in commodity-linked stocks are coming into focus as escalating Middle East tensions drive sharp gains in crude oil and aluminium.

It noted that crude prices have surged nearly 46% in just two weeks - the steepest climb since the post-Covid-19 period - while aluminium has extended its bullish run, creating potential upside for related counters despite broader market volatility.

The research house noted that the conflict could provide trading opportunities in commodities companies such as Petronas Chemicals Group Bhd and Press Metal Aluminium Holdings Bhd. As long as the conflict prevails, there could be trading opportunities in Petronas Chemicals (higher average selling prices) and Press Metal (wider spreads).

Meanwhile, elevated freight rates could pose upside risk to Westports Holdings Bhd. The Middle East-related disruptions could keep effective vessel capacity tight due to route diversions, delayed network normalisation for Suez Canal transit and higher bunker costs. These factors are supportive of elevated freight rates, particularly on Asia-Europe lanes, which could pose upside risk to Westports.

Maybank IB advised selective positioning in commodities and dividend yield plays, noting that Malaysia's domestic sectors should remain resilient even as near-term uncertainty persists. The plantation sector could benefit if the crude oil price rally could sustain above US$100 per barrel, as stronger biodiesel economics may accelerate Indonesia's B50 mandate.

On the defensive side, it highlighted that banks and real estate investment trusts have higher dividends and have maintained consistent dividend payouts of 5-6%. RHB Bank Bhd appears to be the most resilient among the banks, still trading above its 50-day simple moving average (SMA) despite recent weakness.

Its latest preferred top picks include RHB, SD Guthrie Bhd and IHH Healthcare Bhd, citing strong capital positions, leverage to CPO prices, and resilience to healthcare demand.

Meanwhile, Maybank IB maintained its year-end 2026 FBM KLCI target at 1,780, with a bear case of 1,550 should geopolitical risks weigh more heavily on global growth.

Chinese electric vehicle companies to start assembly in Malaysia in 2026 — MITI

According to the Ministry of Investment, Trade and Industry (MITI), several electric vehicle (EV) companies from China such as Zeekr, XPeng and MG Motor have planned to start local assembly activities in 2026 following the expiration of the tax relaxation and incentives for imported CBU EVs. Their plan takes into account the full tax exemption that still applies to locally assembled EVs until Dec 31, 2027.

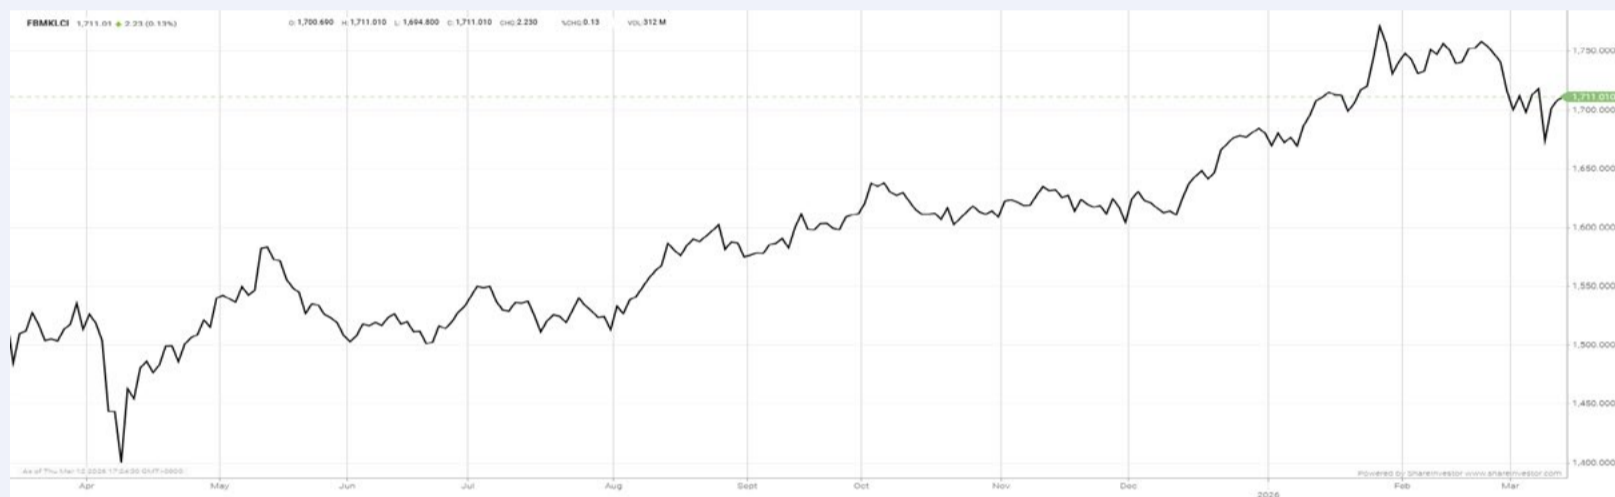

This was in reply to a question in Parliament from Senator Datuk Mustafa Musa on the floor price determination of CBU EV cars and the investment of Chinese EV companies investing in the CBU market in Malaysia.

MITI stated that the end of the RM100,000 floor price relaxation period to the original RM250,000 structure was appropriate to ensure a clearer transition from CBU imports to local assembly and that investments made by national companies and local vendors could be protected.

It also added that the domestic EV ecosystem will continue to grow sustainably, and high-skilled job opportunities in the country can be created and preserved.

VOTE FIRST, ASK LATER? THE GOVERNANCE GAMBLE AT JENTAYU

Every good corporate drama has its protagonists, its antagonists, and a subplot thick enough to fill the business pages for weeks.

The unfolding situation at Jentayu Sustainables Berhad certainly has all the ingredients. There is a requisition by a group of shareholders. There is a proposal to remove the entire board. There is the nomination of a fresh slate of directors. At the same time, parallel legal manoeuvres are playing out in court.

But let us be clear at the outset.

This article is not about the allegations raised by the requisitioning shareholders. It is not about whether the incumbent board deserves to stay or go. It is not about who is right in the broader dispute.

We are framing this discussion on one very specific governance issue: the nomination of new directors without sufficient disclosure of who they are and what they bring to the table. We are not siding with any party, neither the existing board nor the requisitionists. We are commenting independently, from the perspective of a fellow minority shareholder who is ready, willing and eligible to vote.

And like any responsible shareholder, we ask a simple question: How are we supposed to decide when we are asked to vote in the dark?

REPLACING THE BOARD IN THE DARK

The requisition calls for a sweeping change. Not one director. Not two. The entire board. In its place, a new slate of nominees. That is not routine housekeeping. That is a corporate reset button.

But here lies the problem.

The nominations were made without accompanying director profiles. No detailed background. No clear articulation of experience. No disclosure of how these individuals, collectively, would enhance the board's capability. No skills matrix showing what gaps they are meant to fill. No explanation of strategic alignment. It is as if shareholders are being asked to approve a new management team based solely on a list of names.

Imagine attending a job interview and being told, "Trust us, they are good." Would you sign the employment contract without asking for qualifications? Would you appoint a fund manager without reviewing their track record? Would you hire a surgeon without reading their credentials?

Yet here we are, being asked to appoint directors entrusted with fiduciary duties, oversight of strategy, stewardship of capital and long-term sustainability without the most basic information.

Shareholder voting is often described as corporate democracy. But democracy without information is theatre. Directors are not ornamental fixtures. They set strategic direction. They oversee risk management. They approve capital allocation. They hold management accountable. They carry statutory and fiduciary obligations.

Replacing a board is not like changing office furniture; it is replacing the navigators of the ship. Before entrusting a new team to steer the company, shareholders must understand their experience in Jentayu's sectors, their grasp of renewable energy and capital markets, their exposure to complex financing structures, and whether they collectively bring the financial literacy, governance strength, independence and cohesion required of an effective board.

Without this information, shareholders are not voting. They are guessing.

TECHNICALITIES DON'T REPLACE TRANSPARENCY

Some may argue that the Listing Requirements do not explicitly mandate disclosure of detailed director profiles in an EGM scenario. Technically, they would be correct.

Paragraph 8.27(2) of the Bursa Malaysia Listing Requirements applies to notices of Annual General Meetings and refers to Appendix 8A, which sets out specific disclosure requirements, including biographical details for directors standing for election or re-election.

But this is an EGM, not an AGM. So does that mean disclosure standards fall away? Not quite.

Paragraph 8.27(3) states that any notice of a general meeting called to consider special business must be accompanied by an explanatory note containing the necessary information to enable a member to make an informed decision. The explanatory note must also include the effect of any proposed resolution.

Two phrases matter here: "necessary information" and "informed decision". Appointment and removal of directors are clearly special business. And the question becomes unavoidable: Can shareholders make an informed decision to remove an entire board and appoint a new one without knowing who these individuals are, what experience they bring, and how they strengthen governance?

If the answer is no, then the explanatory disclosure is, at the very least, incomplete in spirit. Governance is not about navigating technical loopholes. It is about ensuring substance over form.

DEMOCRACY WITHOUT DISCLOSURE

The core issue here is information parity. When shareholders vote on mergers, they receive valuation reports. When they consider related-party transactions, independent advice is available. It is therefore reasonable to ask why, when voting on the architects of corporate strategy, namely directors themselves, disclosure standards should be any thinner. If the incumbent board is assessed based on its track record and performance, then new nominees should be evaluated equally on their credentials, experience, and suitability.

Parity does not mean bias, nor does it amount to obstruction. It simply means fairness. Shareholders must be placed in a position to make decisions based on balanced, adequate information. Without such parity, minority shareholders are structurally disadvantaged, asked to exercise their voting rights without the tools necessary to do so responsibly.

This very issue formed part of MSWG's recent response to the Securities Commission Malaysia's consultation on the Corporate Governance Framework. We argued for two key reforms.

First, there should be a mandatory disclosure of a board skills matrix. Shareholders must understand what competencies a board requires and whether proposed directors fill genuine gaps. A skills matrix is not cosmetic; it is a governance map.

Second, there should be no parachuting of directors without adequate disclosure. Any requisition proposing the appointment of directors must be accompanied by comprehensive information on the nominees, their background, expertise, independence status, and intended contribution.

These recommendations were not made with Jentayu in mind, but to address a broader governance gap that this episode now illustrates.

THE LARGER GOVERNANCE LESSON

The Jentayu episode should prompt a broader reflection. Corporate Malaysia has grown over the years. Disclosure standards are stronger. Sustainability reporting has expanded from footnotes to full chapters. Governance codes are periodically refreshed and refined. We speak fluently about ESG, board effectiveness and long-term value creation. Yet when it comes to director nominations, especially in contested situations, we still find ourselves wandering in grey corridors where the lighting is strangely dim.

Markets thrive on transparency. Confidence compounds when information flows evenly and predictably. But when disclosure is thin, even if technically permissible, suspicion quietly creeps in. Trust does not collapse overnight; it erodes gradually, like a shoreline against persistent waves. And rebuilding trust is far harder than replacing directors. Credibility, once dented, takes years to restore.

There is nothing wrong with seeking change. No board is sacred. Directors ultimately serve at the pleasure of shareholders. But revolutions, even corporate ones, should not happen in the dark. Before we remove directors, we must understand who replaces them. Before we dismantle a governance structure, we must see the blueprint of the new one.

Before we cast our vote, we must be properly informed. Because corporate democracy without information is not democracy at all. It is roulette.

And minority shareholders should never be asked to place their capital on the table and spin the wheel blindfolded.
